...TEXT: international organizations, either in one of six industrial sectors (chemicals, pharmaceuticals, electronics, food, glass, or cosmetics) or in public research. The first stage occurred during spring 1995 and took place in...

... publication/communication habits. This conversation enabled the development of mutual trust and established a friendly climate. I then asked researchers to relate in detail past experiences of resource exchanges with external... exchange. In the words of scientists with this perspective:

I can ask them for their advice, whereas I have nothing to give in return .... I can call [X] to ask him...equitable transactions. As illustrated in Table 4, making free calculations, prereviewing a paper, and providing advice or ideas for work in progress are all provided without any formal guarantee of confidentiality... control the supposed cost is illusory. Today, no firm can control every phone call or Internet discussion or have a spy following every researcher to every conference, dinner, and coffee break...

How centralized marketing services can enhance brand equity

Browne, Meghan

Drug & Cosmetic Industry v162n2 PP: 38-39+ Feb 1998

ISSN: 0012-6527 JRNL CODE: DCI

TEXT: Brand equity. Far from a catch phrase, it's the lifeblood of most cosmetics and personal care products. In a business climate where only 1% of products achieve $15 million in annual sales, brand equity allows manufacturers...

... Services groups are often caught in the role of ad hoc consultant to brands, giving advice or performing special projects. Their specialization is a valuable asset to enhance the performance of...

... successful practices among different brands and divisions. At one firm, the rapid development of the Internet caused increasing confusion about media decisions. A great deal of overlapping activity occurred as multiple brands separately procured consulting advice from outside experts. There was no central resource where the brands could go for advice. To solve this problem, the company tasked the advertising department with running regular seminars on new media. The department selected one vendor to provide all strategic and tactical Internet development service, and another to provide input on other new media outlets. All of the...
